The first of June 2020, the "Challenge-based learning to promote cultural intelligence and diversity"(CIDizen) project was officially launched thanks to the funding of the Danish National Agency under the Erasmus + programme.

The project aims at fighting racism, discrimination, verbal and physical violence and exclusion by offering a compendium of challenged-based learning resources (IO1) which will provide a suitable and effective framework for developing the key soft skills needed to enhance the cultural intelligence and tolerance of diversity among young learners. The project will also develop and pilot a bespoke in-service training programme (IO2) and MOOC for youth workers (IO3) so that they can use the challenge-based learning resources developed to support young learners to develop their own cultural intelligence and so that they can develop their own challenge-based learning resources and apply them in their youth work practice.

In order to achieve its ambitious goals, the project can rely on the expertise of the following partners

However, the following next steps have already been undertaken in order to ensure a smooth delivery of the project's outcomes :

Regarding the IO1 « CIDizen Digital Breakouts » : FIPL will draft the value proposition that will be used as a guideline by partners to develop the IO before August 2020.
